LOCAL CASES IN CRIMINAL COURT

Trials of Men Arrested for Various Offences Committed in Lower End of Montgomery County—Busy Week at Narristown.

JAMISON MAY GET 20 YEARS.

Man Who Killed Morham Farm Murderer.

James Jamison, of Morham, was convicted of murder in the second degree on Thursday.

Jamison was sentenced to twenty years in the penitentiary. He was twenty years old when he was arrested. Jamison killed Benjamin Coons in Morham, Pa., on June 24th, when the men were supposed to have been to Willow Grove together and returned on a late trolley car. A disagreement arose and a fight took place in which Coons had his wrist broken, was cut on his forehead, the broken nose mashed flat with his face, eye gouged out and generally the man was badly battered. Coons was killed.

The testimony has been previously given in these columns.

Among the witnesses heard was N. E. Walton, undertaker of Hatboro, who had charge of the body; Dr. Read, coroner's physician; William J. H. H. on whose place the murder took place; Thornton Stuckhouse and Anne Moore, who was placed on the Hatboro farm; Constable Palmer and Chief Lever, of the Abington police.

Jamison's plea was self defense, and the commonwealth could not prove premeditation.

JUNK DEALER GUILTY.

Edward Penick, a Philadelphia junk dealer, was tried upon the charge of purchasing junk from minors and receiving stolen goods. Paul Thomas, of Crestmont, said the defendant some time last year came to his house and asked him if he knew where he could buy some junk. Paul said he told Penick that he thought he might get some at Mr. Wenner's. Paul said he and his little brother, Edward, were turned to get some by breaking into Romig's brick yard. He said he and his brother went into Romig's place and took some wire and brass jewelry. These things, Paul said he and his brother sold to the defendant. He said he had a lot of things from his engine and pump, and that he had sold them to Romig's place in 1910. Among the things mislaid were these journals, which he valued at $55.

Isaac Lomax, the defendant's father, said he knew these things had been stolen from Romig's by the boys because he was awakened about 1910 one night, when the boys came home with them. He worked at Romig's and recognized the things. The defendant went upon the stand and denied that he had encouraged the "thousand boys" to steal. The jury found Penick not guilty of purchasing junk from minors but guilty of receiving stolen goods.

At the verdict in the case not in accordance with the court's idea, they ordered that an argument be a new trial take place on Saturday.

GORDON'S TRIAL POSTPONED.

Man Who Killed Wife at Willow Grove Will Be Tried in December.

The Grand Jury returned a true bill on the indictment of William Gordon, the Jerseyman, who is charged with having come to Willow Grove a few months ago and murdered and assaulted his wife with an axe.

Immediately upon the announcement of the Grand Jury finding, J. Ambler Williams, counsel for Gordon, made a request of Judge Swartz that the trial of the case be postponed until the December term. As the District Attorney did not oppose this request it was granted and Gordon was taken back to jail.

PICKPOCKET CONVICTED.

Jacob Cohen, of No. 517 Franklin street, Philadelphia, was tried upon the charge of attempted larceny from the person. Three officers in the employ of the Philadelphia Rapid Transit Company, at Walnut Grove Park, stated that on July 9 they saw Cohen put his hands into the pockets of three different persons. They said he was in the company of three other men. They had been at various amusements and Cohen, the officer said, was arrested. Cohen denied that he had his hands in the pockets of the persons as testified. The jury rendered a verdict of guilty with a recommendation of mercy. Sentence, six months.

James Frankenberg, of North Wales, was found, at the suggestion of District Attorney George W. Watch, not guilty. His wife, who had preferred a charge of larceny, was sentenced to six months in the county jail.

LOMAX CONVICTED.

Isaac Lomax, of Crestmont, a negro, was found not guilty of rape, but guilty of indecent assault on Wednesday. The charges were made by Edith Thompson, his 15-year-old step-daughter. Defendant will be sentenced on Saturday.

JOY RIDER PAYNE GETS OFF.

The Grand Jury at Narristown ignored the bill charging George H. Payne with manslaughter and putting the costs on the county. On August 15, Payne, who was driving an automobile, struck Martin Smith, employed on the Polly Farms, on the York road, above Abington Village. Smith died before reaching the hospital. It was charged that Payne and other men and a lady lady were out for joy riding at the time of the fatal accident. The grounds for the acquittal was that no criminal negligence was shown. It is reported that Payne will receive $7,500 less attorneys fees and expenses, from an insurance company, through the settlement of the case, and that the prospect of the widow, receiving the money was a powerful factor in this disposing of the case.

Dominic Murkora, an Italian, of Switchville, near Jenkintown, on Thursday was brought in guilty of resisting arrest, but was acquitted on the charge of attempted assault on a boy. He will be sentenced on Saturday.

GOOD ROADS FOR WARMISTON.

Editor of Spirit:—The time has arrived to select men to look after the roads in Warmistown, and we must be careful to choose such men as will protect the taxpayer, and also advance road improvement. Our dirt roads have, in certain parts of the township, been frequently damaged, a matter of expense to the taxpayer and a decided benefit to those who must use the road.

The Abington road should be macadamized from the Bristol road to Hatboro, and the macadam road, from the Bristol road to the Bristol road, should be continued through Johnsonville to the Bristol road, and then, perhaps, Northampton to the Bristol road.

It is on Narristown, No. 10, that we need a good road for much of the year. It is on Narristown, No. 10, that we need a good road for much of the year. It is on Narristown, No. 10, that we need a good road for much of the year.

The Crimson Domino

What Happened at a Masquerade in High Life

By MARY L. HAYWESS

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

Pennington is one of those places where wealthy people from the city live all the year round, though some have residences in town in which they spend a few months in midwinter. But as for social pleasures, Pennington residents have most of the enjoyment of city life with those of the country added. Their summer outdoor sports are prolonged till late in the autumn, and they play golf any time when the ground is free from snow.

Young Mr. and Mrs. Archie Worth came to live at Pennington at the invitation of Charlie Erwin, Archie's intimate friend. Had Erwin foreseen what this change of residence would bring about, he would certainly not have proposed it. There resulted one of the most unpleasant situations that ever happen to a man. Worth had no sooner settled at Pennington than he was obliged to go abroad on business. Before his departure he said to his friends:

"Charlie, I'm going to leave Winifred in your charge. Being a newcomer here, it is liable to be pretty dull for her at first, and I shall expect you to see that she gets invitations to what's going on both out of doors and inside, and when she needs an escort take her about yourself. You're one of the few men I know with whom I trust my wife without the slightest compunction. I hope to get back here in time for the holidays, but I may be delayed longer."

Erwin accepted the charge. Indeed, since the Worths had come to Pennington at his instance he could not do less, and, having accepted it, he devoted himself during that autumn to giving Winifred Worth a pleasant season. He drove her out, made up automobile parties for her, escorted her to field sport matches and rode with her across country.

Now, in the communities of smart sets the love affairs that go on among the domain of the girls and carry on an eligible young man, gaining nothing for herself and robbing the girls. There was a married woman of middle age living at Pennington, a Mrs. Edwards, nearly forty and much given to the society of men younger than herself. She was not popular with the women, but so long as she could monopolize their husbands, brothers and nephews she was indifferent to their opinion of her. This woman had resolved to make Charlie Erwin her cavalier when Archie Worth went abroad and left his wife in Charlie's care.

One night or, rather, morning, Charlie Erwin went to bed conscious of being the central figure of a peculiar situation. During the evening Mrs. Edwards had shown plainly that she proposed to monopolize him, and Mrs. Worth, the wife of his friend, who had left her in his charge, had indicated that she had been overwhelmed by one of those mad passions for him which will lead a woman to wreck herself for the man she loves.

Had Erwin been a lightweight man either intellectually or morally perhaps he might have been flattered by Mrs. Edwards' interest in him, while Mrs. Edwards' interest in him was the satisfaction of appropriating him to herself. Winifred Worth had really become infatuated with him. The situation was most dangerous for him and Winifred, for not only had Winifred's infatuation made her reckless, but Mrs. Edwards would doubtless be on the watch for some slip against her rival.

After thinking the matter over Erwin decided that there was no safety for him except in flight. True, the leaving behind of two women who were at several points about him, not being on hand to repress either—was fraught with danger, but less dangerous than to remain. Besides, flight would put him personally in a better position in case the affair came out.

But in order to leave matters in as good shape as possible he went to the vicarage of the two and, assuring her of his devotion to her, told her that it was necessary for him to go away for a time on business.

He had said that Charlie Erwin knew women. He certainly didn't know Mrs. Edwards or he would not have counted upon her, even in this slight respect. She conveyed the news of Erwin's proposed flight to her rival and, knowing that Winifred would see Erwin and endeavor to keep him, lay in wait for the couple with a view to surprising them and thus getting Winifred in her power.

Having a maid who was quite bright in observing people's motions, Mrs. Edwards instructed her to shadow Erwin and report if he visited her rival. At 5 o'clock on the afternoon Erwin was to depart the maid telephoned her mistress that he had gone to Mrs. Worth's home. Mrs. Edwards went there immediately, entered without ringing and found Charlie and Winifred in the library. Mrs. Edwards, having made the two aware of her presence, said that she had called and, not getting a reply to her ring, had ventured in. Then she withdrew.

Erwin saw at once that he had made a mistake in informing Mrs. Edwards of his proposed departure. He felt that he and Winifred were as much in her power as if she had had a dozen witnesses to the scene she had come upon, for a married woman must be above suspicion. He abandoned his plan of going away, feeling it necessary for him to remain and, if possible, scotch the viper who he was convinced had determined to put her poison fangs into her rival.

That year the smart set of Pennington concluded to give a masquerade ball at the close of the season and before the opening of Lent. The costumes worn on the occasion during the first part of the evening were to be covered with dominoes until the unmasking, when the dominoes, with the masks, were to be thrown out.

Charlie Erwin resolved to take advantage of this ball to spring a trap on Mrs. Edwards that he hoped would put her out of business as to doing Winifred Worth or himself any harm. Worth returned a few days before Ash Wednesday. He thanked Charlie for his attentions to his wife, but Charlie could see that he had heard more of those attentions than he cared to hear. Nevertheless, he was content and invited Charlie to dinner on the evening of the ball. After dinner he went out, leaving his friend alone with his wife, thus indicating his confidence. This gave Charlie an opportunity to give Winifred so much of his plan as was essential. He told her to tell her husband that she would wear a crimson domino, but use one of another color. This she promised to do.

There was no hall at Pennington suitable for a ball, so one of the largest dwelling houses was offered by its owner for the purpose. A crimson domino was seen moving about always attended by a purple one, the two dancing together nearly every set. Presently some one standing behind Worth said, "Look out for the crimson!" Worth saw the crimson and the purple dominoes going out of a door together.

Worth was an honorable man and above suspicion, especially on his own wife. But Mrs. Edwards had contrived to let out enough of his friend's attention to his wife during his absence, ordered to suit her purpose to make him anxious. He returned to look behind him and saw a pale blue domino just passing away. The figure turned and pointed to the crimson. There was something about this person which the domino did not conceal that was familiar to him. Whether it was the walk or the gesture, or what it was, he could not tell.

But this did not concern him as much as the crimson. He remembered that his wife had told him she would wear a crimson domino, and he had seen the domino constantly attended by the purple one. Indeed, the purple monster had begun to take root in his breast before the unmasking came. Following the two retreating figures, he was led through several rooms on the ground floor. The figure in purple, evidently a man, occasionally turned his head and looked back.

Worth believed the man fancied himself followed and was making an effort to shake his shadower. This only added to the former's determination to remain on the scene. Nevertheless, he lost sight several times of the pair who mounted from one story to another till they entered an apartment built on the roof and used for plants.

Before going in the purple domino turned evidently to see if there were about, but by this time Worth had learned that if he were to discover what he dreaded he had better keep out of sight. He waited impatiently for awhile then stole to where the two had entered. The crimson domino was enfolded in the purple domino's arms. Rushing forward, there was a muffled shriek. He tore off the mask of the woman he thought to be his wife.

He exposed the face of Mrs. Edwards. The man, however, and Worth saw his friend Charlie Erwin. With an humble apology, Worth retreated, and Erwin felt sure that any expectation of trouble with his friend had been eliminated.

The next morning both Erwin and Mrs. Edwards left Pennington, but not together. Mrs. Edwards did not return, and Erwin remained away until the next spring, when the Worths moved to the city. Then he returned.

Thus by judicious management a woman who yielded to a passing fancy was saved from the world's cold criticism.

Utterly Wretched

Nervous Prostration Long Endured Before Remedy Was Found.
Miss Minerva Beckner, Upper Merion, Pa., writes: "For several years I had nervous prostration, I lived on bread and beef tea because my stomach would not retain anything else. I took many remedies, but obtained no relief until I took Host's Stomachic, when I began to gain at once. Am now cured. Pure, rich blood makes good, strong nerves, and this is why Host's Stomachic, which purifies and enriches the blood, cures so many nervous diseases. Get it today in usual fluid form or chocolate tablets called Sarsaparils."

DIES AT AUTO WRECK

Anthony Burton, a widely known farmer and Civil War veteran of Hristo township, dropped dead when about to start his automobile on a visit at Langhorne on Saturday. He fell back in the seat, and when friends, whom he had been visiting, rushed out to his car they found him unconscious. Death was due to heart trouble.

Mr. Burton was active in Grand Army circles in Bucks County. He served with the One Hundred and Fourth Regiment, and for the last seven years had been commander of its Haysville Post, G. A. R., at Langhorne.

A sneak thief passed through the cellar of Dr. F. H. Stewart, at Doylestown, stopped at the refrigerator and made a clean sweep of everything in sight.

YOU KNOW THESE!!!

A cold is caused by a sudden check in the circulation of the blood; you know when by a goose feeling of lassitude and weakness, before the sneezing, cough or sore throat sets in. The immediate use of Humphrey's "Seventy-Seven," at the first feeling restores the checked circulation, starts the blood coursing through the veins and breaks up the cold. All dealers sell "Seventy-Seven." Humphrey's Home Medicine Co., Cor. William and Ann Streets, New York.

A TOMBSTONE STORY.

The man who lies beneath this stone was a man of genius.

He knew the whole microbe.

With his long Latin terms.

He saw germs on sweet lady's lips

And tobacco contamination.

Of course he was refused, and feared.

In eggs he saw a billion germs.

In milk, in butter, beef.

Were microbes multitudinous.

Septillions past belief.

The mulley cow had germs by stacks;

The tomato was alive;

The rooster had his toes all full;

Old Towser was a live.

He saw them on the baby.

And he saw them on the calf;

The ring tail pup was lousy full.

As was his better half.

To him the whole world was a germ.

With acid sprayed the town.

And so he thought the universe

Should be well disinfect.

He sprinkled lime in his wife's shoes.

With acid sprayed the town.

And armed himself with great sulfur guns

To hunt those microbes down.

But, oh, did microbes kill this man.

Or did he die in bed?

My, no! He went to spray a mule

And got kicked in the head.

C. M. BARNITZ.

KEEP THE WATER FRESH AND

PURE.

It's a wonder some one doesn't knock the egg man for putting water into eggs.

Talk about the milkman milking the pump! Why, the egg farmer puts 85% per cent of water into every egg and gets 25 cents for every egg while he sells a dozen for 40 cents.

But we've seen no one kicking high heels about it, but we fear some fellow might get kicked if customers

THE UNSANITARY OPEN VESSEL.

saw the kind of water they force their hens to drink to make that 80% per cent of egg.

But some believe a hen is a natural born filter; that she can eat and drink any kind of rot and her miraculous mechanism sifts the germs right out and retains only the pure elements for her system, flesh and eggs.

They claim "hens are dirtier than hogs," and they keep them on the huguen plan, and rot eggs rot.

But others believe Job's doctrine:

"Who can bring a clean thing out of an unclean? Not one."

And they also believe "blessed are the merciful, for they shall obtain mercy," and they practice this toward the creatures around them.

Pure, sweet water is one of God's great gifts to men, but millions die every year because of its pollution.

Polluted water kills fowls old and young, retards growth and makes eggs and market poultry carriers of bacteria.

DON'T.

Don't put the poultry raising on

Marx and then pocket the proceeds.

Let her handle the cash and there'll be no crash. Be fair to the fair.

Don't let your turkeys roam over your neighbor's farm to do harm.

Friendship is more precious than turkey meat, so follow the Golden Rule and all keep sweet.

Don't keep eggs too long before setting. Two to three days the limit.

Don't keep a hen that will go over the fence into your neighbor's garden.

Pen such a hen or give her the az for such acts.

Don't hatch too many chicks. They'll be crowded, die or not grow. You'll get disgusted and busted.

Don't waste brains and boodle on every unvarnished theory that you read of. It may read pretty on the page, but later will make you weep and rage.

Don't talk much. "Talk is cheap," but too much of making one weep.

Don't neglect to feed hens both summer and winter. They assist digestion, furnish nutrients, make eggs, and meat and are very cheap feed.

Don't lay to meat food for winter without knowing its protein content before selecting. Remember that spoiled meat product poisons poultry.
